Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an image processing apparatus for converting image data into data in a characteristic of the lens used to photograph the data and a recording medium storing a program used in the apparatus. 2. Description of the Related Art Recently, many digital still cameras have been developed. In general, this type of digital camera has a CCD (Charge Coupled Device) and a recording medium such as a CompactFlash card, which are accommodated in a main body, and records the image data obtained by photographing still and moving images as well as audio data. Moreover, lens data for correcting aberration of the lens corresponding to the type of the CCD is stored in a ROM (Read Only Memory) provided in the main body or in a memory provided in the lens. When the digital camera is set, the image data is read out in accordance with the lens data read out of the lens or the user selects to use an arbitrary lens, and the data thus read out is converted into the image data in the characteristic of the lens. This conversion process is called as “calibration”. As a result, the image quality is improved. A microcomputer is provided in each of the main body and the lens. In each of the main body and the lens, a program is also stored in a ROM. When the image data read out of the CCD is processed in the microcomputer of the lens, a program is read out of the ROM provided in the lens, the image data is read out of the CCD, and a software processing process is performed on the image data. However, the above-mentioned conventional digital still camera 0cc13bf012
