New U.S. envoy says M23 rebels committed war crimes in South Sudan's Unity State. A top U.S. envoy to the violence in South Sudan has said his troops arrested up to 200 war criminals in the ongoing conflict in the oil-rich Unity State. John Norris met South Sudan's president Salva Kiir on Wednesday, according to a statement from the office of U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry. Norris' visit coincided with U.S. warnings against supporting the anti-government rebels known as the "Seleka". "The Seleka are going to have to lay down their arms if they want to stay in the game," he said, adding that he was prepared to work with the government and other players to bring the conflict to an end. The Seleka are a loose alliance of opposition forces dominated by Southern Christian leaders. The clashes started on December 15, when he said the rebels seized control of the capital, Juba. At least five South Sudanese have been killed and more than 500 people have been abducted since the violence erupted. President Kiir rejected a request from Sudan, the United Nations and other international actors to negotiate with the rebels, saying he was opposed to any ceasefire. Norris has said that he is determined to find an end to the conflict. "We will do what we can to see that they do, in fact, lay down their arms," he said. "But we will continue to have communication with the government of South Sudan and with the government of Sudan to try to forge a way forward." Norris will meet opposition group leaders in Juba next week, where he will push for a ceasefire, says Jonathan Hale, a lecturer at Chatham House in London, who said the visit should signal U.S. frustration with the South Sudanese government. "He is clearly rather irritated at Kiir's attempt to demonise the rebels, to ignore the fact that the United States is also very concerned about the plight of the civilians," Hale said. The government of the United States and the government of South Sudan are also at odds, says Hale, as he says the U.S. is increasingly exasperated by Kiir's refusal to engage in serious talks. The United States has demanded that South Sudan's government "stop the violence" and hold those responsible for alleged crimes against humanity. Thousands of people have

Q: Bootstrap 4 Input group inline I have a simple form in which I would like to have the username field and password field on the same line (inline). I have tried adding the display: inline, but I do not see any visible difference. I have tried changing the block to a inline, but this did not work either. I have the textfields styled with a width of 50% and padding of 15px. The input group is styled with a width of 3.75rem and padding of 15px. How can I achieve the desired result? Username: Password:
