The December Holiday collection is a new collection of 11 different icons, fully resized and good looking icons. Version: Version 2.0.Q: How to use Sockets in Ubuntu and Python? I have code that should transfer files from one computer to another, both running Ubuntu. I've tried many things, and got close to getting it working, but I always get errors. I'd like to make this work as-is, or at least get it close, but it would be cool if it could work. Here's what I'm trying. In Python 2.6: `import socket`
`socket.setdefaulttimeout(20)` `socket.socket = socket.socket(socket.AF_INET, socket.SOCK_STREAM)`
`socket.connect(("192.168.1.4", 0))`
`socket.send(bytes(0, "encrpyt"))` `socket.recv(1024)`
`socket.close()` And the error I get is: Traceback (most recent call last): File `"/usr/local/lib/python2.6/dist-packages/pcap.py"`, line 746, in `__init__`
`self.recv(pkt)` File `"/usr/local/lib/python2.6/dist-packages/pcap.py"`, line 508, in `recv` `data = self.file.read(length)` `TypeError: read returns bytes` In

I didn't expect that in less than a year, my publisher would have enough interest to need to pay a sales rep to drum up media buzz. And what seemed like a fun side project has quickly become my primary business, thanks to the belief in my work from agents and editors and authors, and the remarkable dedication of my devoted team. My gratitude goes out to my agent, Theresa Park, who (as usual) is unflappable and inspiring, to my editor, Susan Moldow, for finding my work engaging and intelligent, to publicist Sarah Hodge for her great communications skills, to my designer, Becky Huntley, who so astutely understands my vision for books, and to copyeditor and proofreader Arlene Martirani. I'm also deeply grateful to my family—husband Michael and daughters Bria and Miriam—for their love and support. Finally, I want
