a possible homology between the two bones. The shape, size, histology and nature of calcified tissue of the neontomous reptile vertebral centrum and the mammalian epiphysis are more or less similar. Both are centrosymmetrical, solid masses of bone, and it is likely that the centrum may derive directly from the growth plate, as it does in the mammals. The present observations suggest that in the newt, for example, the centrum is composed primarily of three concentric tissues: organic, inorganic, and calcified.
Comparison with work in the literature reveals that a firm connection exists between the crocodilian epiphysis and the mammalian epiphyseal cartilage.
Certain stages in the development of the mammalian epiphyseal cartilage are perhaps displayed in the neontomous reptile mesenchyma, which constitutes the early outer region of the centrum. Association Between Genetic Polymorphism of 7-Dihydroflavones and Flavonoid Intake in a Japanese Male Population. Flavonoid intake has been shown to be positively associated with the incidence of various chronic diseases in a Japanese population.

We explored the effect of single nucleotide polymorphisms (SNPs) of flavonoid-metabolizing enzymes on flavonoid intake in a Japanese population using a validated food frequency questionnaire. The SNPs that affect the metabolism of the main flavonoids were analyzed by direct sequencing, and their relations with the flavonoid intake were examined. We investigated 7 SNPs in the following genes: CYP2C9, CYP2C19, UDP-glucuronosyltransferase 1A3 (UGT1A3), UDP-glucuronyltransferase 2B7 (UGT2B7), SULT1A1, and SULT1E1. Their intake was significantly associated with the number of SULT1E1 alleles.
