1. Address book, patient list, and email. 2. Simple text editing, including typing, pasting, cutting, pasting.... a) He's a power hitter who's done a great job of taking pitches off the plate and getting deep into counts, b) His ABs and BABIP are on the rise, c) He's hitting higher up in the order (a bit of a paradox, but he's hitting the 6th and 7th spots in order more often than before), d) He's got some nice on-base skills, and he's got some decent speed, e) On defense he's gotten better, and he's no longer a wuss on the bases, f) His arm is solid and we didn't have any issues with his speed on defense, and g) The "glove thing" is a proven issue. There was also the play when he had the hard slide into second base that might have hurt his momentum. He does have a good first step, but that makes it more difficult to get a good read on the ball. His arm is much better now than it was, but it's still below average. He's had a few trips to the DL, but the root cause of those is generally loss of playing time. He's done a good job of getting back up the ladder quickly and reaching into the heart of the order when needed. But I don't think I've seen anything that makes me say "oh wow, the kid is ready to be a legitimate everyday player." He's always had good plate discipline and was able to move the ball around at a high rate in the minors, but he has a tendency to try to swing too hard. Last year there were a lot of good reasons to believe he was a legitimate everyday player, and it's still true to a degree. But those flaws are at least somewhat consistent and I'm not seeing anything to get me excited at all. 10. Tommy Joseph, OF, I haven't given Tommy much thought as the season has gone along, but it's safe to say he's improved with every game. I don't really see a glaring hole in his game right now, and he's given me nothing to think he's a problem with the bat. He's not going to be a really high OBP guy, but he's doing a good job of not forcing at-bats. His speed is going 77a5ca646e
