I've been looking at the 3DJS page. There's a lot of great stuff there, but I can't find the base-renderable object that most of the examples use. You can see the source for example Where does this object come from? If it doesn't exist, where should I start? A: I believe the 'renderer.html' you linked to is the 3DJS website itself. There is no base-renderable anywhere in the examples, because it is not a base class and is only defined in the documentation. All the rendering classes inherit from base-renderable so it makes sense that there is nothing to reference in the code. That being said, 3DJS is a relatively simple library, and as such many of the base objects exist to make the other objects more clear. If you want to learn how to use 3DJS, this is the first thing that you'd want to learn. Then move on to some of the more complicated items and try to figure them out by yourself. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a technique for operating an integrated circuit, and more particularly to a system and method for operating an SRAM array in an SRAM controller. 2. Related Art Synchronous Random Access Memory (SRAM) is well-known as a memory solution that can be used for storing data that needs to be retained in a presence of soft errors such as cosmic ray. A good article that describes background information can be found at the following Internet website: Even though the SRAM is generally more reliable than more traditional memory solutions, SRAM is still prone to errors. It has been observed that some SRAM soft errors, such as data retention errors or data errors in the SRAM cells, often appear as random errors, which means that the errors are often

What's New in the Sound Effect File Browser?

Sound Effect File Browser is designed for finding the right sound effect among many. It can be used as a tool for game developers, and it's also capable of playing sound effects from any number of files contained within an organized folder. The program supports files of various file formats, including WAV, MP3 and OGG. It doesn't use additional codecs, so you will need to specify a folder for your audio files in the first place. A filter is available for finding specific sound effects among other files. These can be selected from a list and are based on file name, category or author. Once a sound effect has been found, you can copy it directly to your project. Key features: Highlight the selected file - instead of starting the program from the beginning, you can skip a few steps with the highlighted file. Open the selected folder - the program will then start from the main folder of your audio files. This means you can quickly browse through your folder and open any audio file from it. Copies the selected sound effect to the working folder - once a sound effect has been found, it can be moved directly to your project. You can also open the main folder of your audio files at any time in order to find another sound effect. One way to find the right sound effect among many files - Sound Effect File Browser supports various file categories, like games or film / TV / animations, and allows to specify which sound effects to play.
