In late March, I attended a talk by Michel de Palma (Slovenia/Spain), who has recently completed a study on the Spanish and French language in the Middle Ages (“Premodern Multilingualism at the Cross-roads of the World”). I confess to finding him an entertaining speaker, and he is interviewed on the Times Lens blog, whose editor, Iris Biassof, followed de Palma’s talk from the front of the room. The blog entry offers a good description of what de Palma found at some of the sites he visited, but in his response to Biassof, I cannot avoid commenting on the former 3e33713323
