President Nicolas Sarkozy wanted to choose France's next prime minister himself, but yielded to the resignation of his Prime Minister Francois Fillon after a scandal of which he himself was partly responsible. Mr Fillon resigned on Monday morning after it was reported that he had paid his Welsh wife Penelope £600,000 ($$1.1m) for allegedly doing no work. This is not the first time Mr Fillon has attracted investigation. In January, he was charged with taking money for fake jobs for his wife and other family members. She was also accused of failing to declare an interest in a €450,000 (£388,000) job for her younger brother which he received in 2010. Mr Sarkozy was initially hesitant to pick Mr Fillon because the man he wants to replace him is perhaps the most powerful person in the French government: the president of the Senate. "We believe that a change of government would make it very difficult for Sarkozy to pass the constitutional reform that he is trying to pass," said Mr Claude Gueant, a minister in Mr Sarkozy's previous government and a member of the National Assembly. "He will need the support of all parliamentarians to do that and if he has to deal with a new government, he will have new problems." 570a42141b
