Kledic's Doublet ($45) is a fine example of Italian baroque sculpture. A skilled craftsman, Luigi Kledic made a name for himself as a prolific sculptor of life-sized portrait busts, installed the most notable public monuments in Italy and the Vatican. Kledic worked in several schools of art-the Venetian Canvas, Parisian Baroque, and Bolognese Venetian School. His enormous talent was recognized by Pope Pius IX who gave him commissions to create some of his most renowned sculptures, including the 16 feet tall bust of Pope Gregory XVI that he completed for his patron in 1853. (Following the restoration of the Papal Gallery in the Vatican, this bust is housed with the bust of the same pope that Kledic made for the Department of History in the Vatican Library in 1852.) Kledic's most famous work, the colossal statue of Giuseppe Mazzini that sits at the base of Gianicolo in the heart of Rome, was destroyed in the bombing of Rome by the Germans in 1944. Kledic's Doublet is a balance of opposites, signifying the two halves of a man, one masculine and the other feminine. It is a graceful portrayal of the male figure, showing Adam's physical strength and manhood. The pose, the face, the neck, and the hair all combine for a powerful look. Kledic used thick organic form and light to create an airy sense of balance and grace in the sculpture. The shaping of the face is the most detailed part of the sculpture, and it is done with extreme realism. The colors of the clothing and skin are harmonious and healthy.1059 Year 1059 (MLIX) was a common year starting on Sunday (link will display the full calendar) of the Julian calendar.
