How to use the registration code When installing Autodesk Autocad the registration code is used to obtain a serial number. The registration code is printed on the bottom of the Autodesk Autocad CD. You can check whether the registration code is correct or not on the Autodesk Autocad Home page. How to generate the serial number To generate the serial number, you must log on to Autodesk Autocad (version 6.0 and higher), click on the Help menu, and then click on "Get registration code". After selecting the serial number, click on "Use". E2P15N is the first homologous prenyltransferase from the 8-S-HMG-CoA reductase superfamily. This enzyme requires an E-V-E tripeptide as the electron acceptor instead of the C-terminal cysteine in the other enzymes. We expect that, like the other enzymes of this superfamily, E2P15N would show strong regiospecificity for the homoserine residue when the prenyl group is connected to position 3. In contrast to its other homologues, our studies have revealed that E2P15N is also able to accept a prenyl group attached at position 2. This is the first case in which such a homologous enzyme can carry out this reaction. Because of its crucial role in glycoprotein biosynthesis, 8-S-HMG-CoA reductase is one of the major targets of specific herbicides and fungicides. Studies of herbicide inhibition of this enzyme revealed a specific high-affinity inhibitor, HMG-CoA reductase inhibitor-1, that has no effect on plant sterol synthesis. Because of the lack of a suitable screening system to identify selective inhibitors of biosynthesis of 8-S-HMG-CoA reductase, most inhibitors are, at best, "mixed inhibitors" of sterol and nonsterol functions. However, the activity of one specific inhibitor, pyridinyloxypyrimidine herbicides, has been shown to be mainly directed against the enzyme specific for sterol biosynthesis. Thus, our finding that an enzyme homologous to E2P15N can accept a prenyl group at position 2 should provide a better screening system for selective inhibitors of sterol biosynthesis
