Thank youThe Guarana Prebiotic Beverage The Prebiotic Beverage, first marketed as Guarana Prebiotic Beverage, was a powdered nutritional supplement made by Columbia Products. Guarana Prebiotic Beverage (also sometimes called Guarana) was a powdered beverage which was advertised to be a source of dietary fiber. From 1976 to 1978, the powdered drink was promoted by advertising that claimed it was a source of essential vitamin B1, B2, and B3 (thiamine, riboflavin, and niacin, respectively). According to the advertisements, the prebiotic properties of the drink were due to its composition of approximately 50% guarana. The advertisement claimed that one serving of the drink was "equivalent to three servings of fruit" and that one serving would be "equivalent to 3,000 servings of fruit." The Guarana Prebiotic Beverage contained maltodextrin as a filler, which the advertisement claimed was a source of dietary fiber. In 1977, the Federal Trade Commission began an investigation of the claims made by the manufacturer regarding the supposed prebiotic properties of the drink. In 1978, the Federal Trade Commission recommended the revocation of the beverage's "Guarana" trademark. The program presents information on public issues and other issues in the field of public affairs. The program was premiered in 1979, just in time for the "Bicentennial Episode" on PBS, and became a weekly feature on the Public Broadcasting Service (PBS) that ran from 1979–1990 and again from 2000–2004. It was hosted by Randy Shilts until his death in 1990. In 1992, it was taken over by Jim Lehrer. The program was restructured as a series of specials in the late 1990s, which are shown on public television in various parts of the country. The series is produced by Boulder, Colorado-based Public Television station KGNU. Its executive producer is Steve Bresnan.
