If you have access to these documents on a server or a machine that is not connected to the internet, you may use the included Web Browser to read the files. Using the Web Browser you can also transfer files from your machine to Windows Server 2012 R2 in a hot-sync connection. In this case, you will not need a local installation of DiskInternals Linux Reader on the server. To do this, you will need to create a Hot-Sync Connection in Windows Server 2012 R2 with DiskInternals Linux Reader. To create a Hot-Sync Connection: Open the File Explorer and go to C:\Program Files\DiskInternals Right-click on the DiskInternals folder and select New > Server Share In the Server Type field: select Automatic In the Server Name field: type in your desired name Select the radio button for Read/Write access In the Security section, click Next In the Computer or Network drop-down menu: select the machine that you want to connect to In the Authentication section, check the boxes next to Allow sharing and Allow everyone to add references Click OK You can now create a Hot-Sync connection to transfer files between the Windows Server 2012 R2 machine that contains the target documents and the machine that has the documents you want to transfer. To do this: Using the Web browser on the Windows Server 2012 R2 machine with the source documents, navigate to the DiskInternals URL to browse your documents. If your target machine is on a domain, login to that domain with an admin account. If the machine is not on a domain, use the predefined administrator credentials. Using the Browser, select the documents that you want to transfer and select the Send Document URL button. On the diskinternals README.txt file that you have in your default downloads folder, download the PKG (Pascal Script) file and save it in the same folder where you want to transfer the documents. Double-click on the PKG file to open the script and perform the necessary steps to configure the hot-sync connection between the two machines. Confirm the settings to make sure everything is working correctly. After you confirm the settings, you will be able to send files between the two systems using the hot-sync connection.
