Happy anniversary, dearest wife! The most well-known everyday items in Russia - chocolate, vodka, and even socks - are all manufactured from animal-derived or plant-derived raw materials. It is now time for Russia to look for alternatives to these products. Due to the coronavirus pandemic, most of the mass-produced products have now been shut down, and people have been forced to cook at home. This of course presents a unique opportunity for Russian designers to work on new products, as the country is currently going through an "Idaho period." Valery Stepanov, the head of the Association of Russian Companies of Mechanical Engineering, Manufacturing and Supply of Goods and Products (Agroserhos-Ts), believes that this may be a good time to develop a new type of soap. Read more "I think that for the time being we must focus on soap, as soap is the best of all hygiene products," he told Reuters on Monday. Agroserhos-Ts is working on the project for two years now, and recently presented a prototype for a new bar soap. The product is made from carrot, cucumber, radish, and potato with rosemary as its main ingredient. Though the soap won't appear on supermarket shelves for a few months, it shows what appears to be a vast potential for the organic-based and vegan products manufactured in Russia. Unusual, perhaps, but not new. In fact, there are many well-
