The series has been running in Shueisha's Weekly Shōnen Jump since 1984 and has been adapted into several television series and many feature length movies. DragonBall Z is one of the most popular anime series of all time, and one of the longest running manga. It has been broadcast in the US from 1991 to 1996 with Saban Entertainment handling the American licensing and syndication of the anime. In the wake of this partnership, it gave rise to a licensed action video game series by Tecmo, itself now part of its Bandai Namco Entertainment division. The game's title is based on the Japanese word doragon bazu or dragon ball which translates literally as "thunder ball". It was an unusual choice of name for a game set in the DragonBall universe, when the series is known in English as DragonBall. The DragonBall series of games have been released in various iterations since the beginning of the Atari ST computer's lifespan in the early 1990s. ABOUT One-Punch Man: One Punch Man is an anime

Twilight Princess: A New Legend of ZeldaPosted by z-post on September 3, 2011 at 10:54:37 AM CDTQ: Asking "Blah blah blah..." to be given attention I was watching a TED talk/video this morning about setting up a workshop for the next generation of scientists. One of the points was asking students to ask the instructor for time to air out their thoughts/ideas and ask or answer questions. The speaker said one of the good ways to be given a lot of attention is to say the following: ...blah blah blah... At about the two-minute mark I start to think well, no-one gives their thoughts in the TED talks without asking first. How has this phrase fallen out of common use? What would an example be that doesn't have a reason to say so (because it is not something ever said, or someone just replies with "sure, blah blah blah")? A: Saying "Blah blah blah" is not something people often say, but there are lots of terms that don't have perfect analogs in common English, and some of those "colloquialisms" really do follow a fairly regular pattern. Specifically, "Blah blah blah" is a fairly universal way of getting someone's attention for a reason that isn't obvious. You have to be careful about using that one, because it can be seen as rude.
