What's new in Endless RPG:

, Tjallingii Contents "A whole new realm of talking beasts, of questions of life and death, of a world of untold possibilities stretching between the stars." -- Sam Hellerman, From the Very Depths of the Cosmos Cosmodome and Tjallingii, beings so far imagined only in their heads, were living aliens from the extrasolar system Tjallingii in the Phaeton Galaxy. It was first contacted over a hundred years ago by Christopher Taverner, an archaeologist aboard the Canterbury space freighter. Taverner transmitted a quite illegible message onto the ship's drive plasma and, unbeknownst to him, it was picked up by another starship passing nearby. The message was encoded for the main ship to translate, but could not be reconverted by any known means, leading Taverner and Captain Kornil to think that the message came from another civilization on Tjallingii. In the following months, at length, the main ship visited Tjallingii, directly but cautiously. With the ships computers, using Kornil's interpretation of the message as a guide, Commander Jaron and a few of the crew explored the planet. They found it had oceans and lands in which ancient cities and monoliths lay buried beneath ancient forests. The planet was warmer than Earth, having an equatorial zone of pleasant weather around a caustic desert at the surface, which in time would cover half the planet. Their exploration was limited to the nearer half of the planet, due to fearing the unknown monoliths with which they were surrounded. The nature of their intelligence was not yet understood. The explorers returned to Canterbury with the artifacts recovered. Twenty-seven years passed before another ship,

The Meteor, found their planet, and returned a book which Christopher Taverner had written about his findings, depicting his life and research. The Meteors then scouted Tjallingii once more and found what appeared to be a highly advanced culture of humanoids worshiping a brilliant blue-green god. They returned to their ship after Captain Kornil insisted they do so. Commander Jaron returned to the further half of the planet with a landing party, while the ship made a thorough examination of the near half. When they had returned to the Canterbury, it was found that the ship's artifact libraries had been tapped and the book released from the ship's drive. Jaron and the landing party were ambushed by a different sort of humanoid civilization
