Astryd Jemison stands as a dedicated Sol Force Medic amongst the cadre of Sol Force officers who fight the aliens on the battlefields of SolSpace. But when she is sent to investigate the mysterious disappearance of a fellow Sol Force scientist on the planet Arbuda IV, she finds herself caught up in a desperate race to save the people of Arbuda IV from a vicious parasite that is ravaging the entire planet. She must wield her medical knowledge, coupled with the latest in nano-medicine and biotech to save the lives of the dying and dying, all the while, keeping her head above water in the dangerous and deadly Pit! All About The Characters Astryd Jemison • Your humble Medical Science Officer is even more capable than you might have guessed. A Sol Force Medic by trade and a Sol Space General's daughter by birth, Astryd Jemison spent a decade serving as a Spaceborne General's daughter and aspiring pilot in the Sol Force before joining the Sol Star Army in an effort to stabilize the Sol Space Frontier. • Your humble medical officer isn't a quack and she won't put up with stupid questions about her medical career. Faced with a deadly alien menace, she becomes the best, most brutal, and most effective medic you've seen in The Pit. • Built tough. She's pumped with the best of the Sol Star Military's latest biotech. The Sol Space Army's Medic Division is in her blood. Dixie Mere • The most powerful, most-feared monster in the universe. A mutated Earth monster brought to life from the Central Picture Of Infinite Space by SolForce scientist, Dixie Mere. • Dixie's not your average monster. She's a beautiful, almost human-like creature, with extremely limited speech patterns and strength and vitality. The most-lethal construct in the picture, she is perhaps the toughest monster in The Pit. • The only monster to perform physical attacks and wield a weapon. Nothing can stop her once she's set her mind on something. About The Game The Pit is a dangerous, filthy place, but Astryd comes prepared with a satchel of medical equipment and years of medical training. She carries the latest in nano-medicine and biotech with the power to mangle and mend. As she plunges into the Pit on the trail of fellow Sol Force scientist Tamiko Hoshinara, she will sacrifice as many enemy lives as

Flying Colours is a multiplayer arena-based PVP flight combat simulator for VR. Take to the skies in the iconic Sopwith Camel or Fokker Triplane and do battle around a fictional island group. Use your flying skills, teamwork and combat strategy to rule the skies and dominate the opposition. This game is in Early Access and is being constantly improved. Please view the Early

Access information for more details. The game features an exclusive highly realistic flight engine with aerodynamic modelling and damage system that changes how the aircraft is controlled with every hit. Controlled with an Xbox, or compatible dual analogue controller, you will achieve real-life manoeuvres, stunts and soon master taxiing, take-off and even landing a vintage taildragger aircraft. Fuel strategy can be the difference between air superiority and finding yourself on the back foot. Take off quickly, with less fuel but a lighter and better performing aeroplane for quick sorties, or fuel for longer, suffer a performance decrease due to the weight but stay aloft for longer patrols. Land anywhere "off-piste" and receive a jerrycan of fuel to get you safely home, or just to continue ruling the skies for a little longer. Flying Colours brings you exhilarating combat, smoke-trail filled skies, chaotic battles, hilarious in-flight mishaps, and a taste of real vintage air combat in two of the most recognisable fighter aircraft of the early twentieth century. Why did we make this game? Remember when we were young, we might have played with toy aeroplanes and models. Back then our bedrooms became the scenery as we re-enacted daring air battles and the amazing feats from those air aces. Flying Colours is the game that was made to bring back those memories. There are few rules, just a flight playground for you against others online. Fancy 7 vs 1? Go for it! Want to challenge each other to perform crazy stunts and explore the limitations of your aircraft? Absolutely! We made the game we wanted to play. We hope you enjoy it as much as we do. "River City Girls" has a love child with its own biology, and that's fun. Play as one of four characters, each one a unique blend of a broad variety of powers and weapon types. It also features a unique retro-futuristic art style that's both easy to understand and looks very cool. Each of the four characters has their own special moves, but you'll also be able to use combos by hitting three opponent with a precise attack. These special attacks will only be useful if you can link multiple attacks together. If you hit two or three enemy at once, you'll get a juggle move that will knock them off the level. The combat is very fluid and easy to understand, offering a simple tap-block control scheme that's not too difficult to get used to. The game has a nice play balance, with the abilities of each character working well together. In fact, due to the skill-tree of upgrades, each character feels unique and interesting. The game is very challenging, but there's also some variety in difficulty. PC Gamer River City Girls is a fun brawler with a

What's new in Escape Legacy VR:

: The Science of Human Sense of Touch is a new book by Irvin Rock, PhD, neuroscientist at the University of Pennsylvania, that investigates how our sense of touch works. Dr. Rock takes on the highly controversial topic, and works to break down one of the most discussed, familiar and misunderstood topics in medicine. How can we better understand our sense of touch? The reality is that we have very little information about how our sense of touch works. Rock joins neuroscientist Karen Fields in an effort to start filling in some of the blanks, and he does so by helping to lay out current definitions of the five basic types of touch sensations and explaining what they mean in the vast world of cells and their function. He and Fields are not your typical touch therapists. Dr. Fields has clinical training in medical massage and has worked as a massage therapist in the past. But, it was her three-year tenure in academia that lead her to discovering how the five basic types of touch can be detected and perceived, and could be a tool for those in the fields of medicine and psychiatry. As a researcher, Dr. Rock came upon the idea that nerve cells in the brain could be classified according to their type of stimulus. "They can be stimulated by things that are always, like light or saltwater, or things that we use about every day, like the skin, or the tongue, and they can be activated by mechanical stimuli like touch," he says. To test his theory, Rock purposefully brought a group of Penn student volunteers into the lab and performed a mini body scan using the five types of touch: skin, salt, vibration, pain and temperature. As the subject started touching their limbs, electric shocks would stimulate certain nerve endings and the subject would report back if they felt the type of touch sensation. With these experiments, he was able to find similarities in each stage of the sensation and perception, which led him to propose the idea that the brain functions by combining the brain mechanisms for processing touch stimuli with brain mechanisms for processing pain. And he realized that his previous experience as a massage therapist made him an expert, because he realized that touch and massage activate the same brain mechanisms. Unfortunately, there are few studies that really look into the effects of touch on our minds,” says Rock. He brings up a study on the effects of touch done by British psychologist Patrick Wall, PhD. In this research from 1987, “he did a

Pathology education during training: one program's experience. A comprehensive pathologic curriculum was designed and implemented during the first 2 years of residency training in the United States. There are 2 parts to the program: a core curriculum supported by an online module containing didactic information, test banks, "caselets," and modules developed by individual pathologists, and an elective course involving a required selection of 100 out-patient studies. The online component was initially adapted from resources developed in Canada. The program as currently defined still consists of a list of topics to be covered at a given time within the curriculum, but the module itself is designed to be an interactive tool for each resident's individual learning needs. Since the first release of the module, each resident has been given 4 test bank examinations, based on a preexisting bank of 10 questions, with a passing score of 75% or more used as the standard for success. The module offers a form of grading and feedback that has allowed the pathologist to be both directed and motivated to achieve a desired level of knowledge. The questions are developed not only to reflect the known distribution of trainee pathology knowledge but also to eliminate knowledge questions that are outside the limited scope of general pathology. In some studies, a "homeless" learner moves to a new city for residency, and the module was designed to cover the general literature important to the resident's immediate needs and practice and to provide 2 separate examinations.
