It can be used as monotherapy or in combination with 5-fluorouracil or in combination with oxaliplatin as first-line therapy for metastatic disease. However, many patients are not responsive to irinotecan alone. Consequently, there is a need to improve the efficacy of irinotecan, including the development of new formulations that have either improved tumor-targeting characteristics or better pharmacokinetics. In particular, irinotecan shows a rapid absorption from the gastrointestinal tract which, together with a high inter-individual variability in systemic exposure, may result in inconsistent and suboptimal anticancer activity. It is known in the art to use irinotecan and its active metabolite, 7-ethyl-10-hydroxy-camptothecin (SN-38), for treatment of a variety of cancers. One approach of increasing the efficacy of irinotecan treatment is to allow selective delivery to tumors without substantial toxicity to normal tissues by enhancing the uptake and retention of irinotecan in the tumor. Such selective delivery can be achieved by binding to an endogenous ligand that is specifically expressed by tumors. In fact, antibodies that are specific for a ligand that is overexpressed by many solid tumors are in clinical trial in the United States for use in the treatment of a variety of diseases including various cancer therapies. It would be desirable to formulate a drug product that increases the retention of a chemotherapeutic agent in tumors. The art is
