With the world evolving so quickly, Photoshop can be a useful tool, especially for any photographer who is using Photoshop to retouch images. Many things that I do in Photoshop, such as color balance, saturation, and sharpness, and toning, I wouldn't be able to do any other way. In this book, I show you how to edit images in the proper way, using Photoshop to enhance an image without destroying its original quality. With so many programs available these days, being able to use Photoshop can really make a difference when retouching images. In this book, I discuss how to work with layers, brushes, and channels and explain how to use them all to create stunning images that will wow your friends and family. ## A Personal History of Photoshop Adobe Photoshop is a powerful software program that is considered to be the program of the current generation of digital image editors. So, why do I say that it's a personal history of Photoshop? Unlike the other image editing programs that I discuss throughout this book, which I mention only occasionally, I use Photoshop on a consistent basis. I've been editing photographs since I was 8 years old and I've used Photoshop since it was introduced in the early 1990s. I still have a copy of Photoshop 3 that I used when I was first starting out, and I still use Photoshop CS6 when I'm editing. If I had to choose only one software program for editing images for the rest of my life, it would be Photoshop because it works. (However, I'm not saying that I can't use other software programs. I do use the other programs I mention here when I need to.) I like working with the features in Photoshop because I feel they lend themselves to any type of photograph, from my work as a business photographer to my personal work. I photograph the same types of people and subjects for each type of work. Figure 1-1: A textured background with no light. | --- | --- When I created the business-photography tutorial on this book's website (www.digitalphotographyschool.com), I chose this image of a background (Figure 1-1) as a sample of what I like to work with in Photoshop. I love to create textures and create an interesting background in any image. In this tutorial, I demonstrate how to edit images for various kinds of photography. When I created the

Every once in a while something happens that changes the world. An invention. A discovery. A paradigm shift. During these times, it becomes painfully obvious how small the human brain is compared to all of the machinery and resources it takes to make our lives simpler, more efficient, and more enjoyable. As with many aspects of our lives, we are limited to having to do this because we are only human. We are all humans and have limits to how much we can take in. What makes us different from one another, is that we want to take in more and more information than is natural for us as a human. We want to know more and more and we want to know it quickly. We want to retain it permanently. We want it to be useful to us. This is why we studied more and more and tried to learn what we could take in, and retain as much of it as we could. What we weren't limited to was to use as much of it as we could to create pictures, stories, and events in our minds that we could pass on to others in order to share the ideas. We wanted to make sure they could see as well as we did. We wanted to make it tangible for them in order for them to understand how we felt about what we did. We wanted them to feel as if they were there with us. When we no longer were able to show them what we were doing, we had to return to the way things were. It's 2017 now and we no longer can make sense of much, if any, of what we are seeing. We can't share and share our knowledge like we used to. The internet is literally at the forefront of our lives now. It gives us real time access to everything and anything we could imagine. It's made us think that if it can be typed it must be real. There is some truth to this, but it's incomplete. While we can see and hear and even touch and taste something online, it's still not real to us. We don't "hear" it or really "feel" it when we watch a movie. There's a disconnect between what we are seeing and hearing and what we are creating in our mind's eye. We're not fooling anybody. It's why reality TV
