Ratings RDPPortChanger 5 of 5ator and polymer, can be easily separated into water, oil, and organic phases. On the other hand, the solubility parameter of a polymer, of which the volume comprises mainly of a hydrophilic monomer, is low; therefore the separation of the polymer is difficult, for it is chemically bonded with water, and the viscosity thereof becomes high. On the other hand, when the polymer is bonded with water as a solvent, its solubility parameter becomes higher; as a result, it becomes easy to separate. Furthermore, if the polymer is not cross-linked, the solvent diffuses into the pores of the polymer; therefore, the solubility parameter of the obtained polymer is lower than that of the polymer which is cross-linked. In addition, for manufacturing inexpensive polymer separators or membranes, injection molding is preferable. [Patent Document 3] Japanese Patent Publication No. 60-51542 [Pat
