Despite the fact that the corresponding plug-in remains available (whereas it didn't in Snow Leopard), when I start the app, there is no option to import my account from Google Calendar. Just the usual clock and the date selector. It does, however, work in the browser (when I start it in the F12 Developer Tools). If I click "Add account", it takes me to the Google calendar page, which asks for my GCal credentials. After that, I get an error message about the app not being able to access Google Calendar. What am I doing wrong? A: In Lion, the Google Calendar app has been ported to Cocoa. Now that it's written in cocoa, it's just a UI issue. He rose to prominence in the 1960s and '70s with memorable roles in a string of box office hits: The French Connection, Airport, The Deer Hunter, Dog Day Afternoon, Mommie Dearest, and Pennies From Heaven. He has established himself as one of the great character actors in Hollywood, and over the past 20 years has appeared in over 80 films. His recent work includes Meet Joe Black (1998), Ghosts of Mississippi (1996), Paris, je t'aime (1994) and The Man Who Knew Too Much (1956), in which he played a brilliant scientist who tried to kill the spy who was trying to steal his secret formula. He was born in Hartford, Conn., on Feb. 21, 1929

I am getting user input from a website and then using this data to create a new hash. The website has the information within a table with a Misc Loves but I want to create a hash which looks something like the following. Misc Loves I assume I would use a hash function like the sha1/sha256 or md5. In which case does it make sense to modify the input that was provided by the user or do I just treat it like a constant input. A: SHA-1 is good enough if your input is short and your probability of collisions is low. SHA-2 is better, and fast to compute. If the key is of the same length as your hash, SHA-2 with a 64-bit hash is good enough. Otherwise, it's best to use SHA-2 with a 96-bit hash, or SHA-3 with an 96- or 160-bit hash. Either of those should be good enough for your problem. A: Hashing algorithm such as SHA-1 or SHA-2 are OK, but hashing is something that's not really unique by itself: The same message can be re-hashed with a different algorithm, the same hash will give the same results. That is why you need an authentication key to make sure the user is indeed the owner of a certain message. You might also want to look at some password hashing algorithms, like PBKDF2 (one of the candidates is scrypt, see Wikipedia) which gives you more control over the hash. A naive implementation of these algorithms might be ok (i.e. you authenticate the user, you just need to compare the hash with the actual message in the database), but you might want to look at some stronger schemes.
