Detection of Metal Ions in Hairy Epidermal Sheaths of Common Ferns
{#sec2dot1-molecules-24-00769} ----- Al, Mg, Ba, Ca, and Fe were detected in the epidermal sheaths of common fern fronds collected from four sites in the Czech Republic (Figure 3{ref-type="fig"}). Among these elements, Al had the highest concentration of about 150 mg kg<sup>-1</sup> dry mass, while the lowest was attributed to Mg (10 mg kg<sup>-1</sup> dry mass). The concentrations of the other elements were much lower and ranged between 0.2 and 1.5 mg kg<sup>-1</sup> dry mass. This is the first study reporting the detection of Al and Mg in the epidermal sheaths of common ferns using Raman microspectroscopy. These concentrations of Al and Mg in the epidermal sheaths are comparable with the concentrations detected in the stems of *M. esculenta* using laser ablation inductively coupled plasma mass spectrometry (LA-ICP-MS). The levels of the various elements were different. For example, the concentration of Mg in the stem of *M. esculenta* was two times lower (18.5 mg kg<sup>-1</sup> dry mass) \[[@B24-molecules-24-00769]\]. The roots of *M. esculenta* contained two times higher levels of Al and Mg (34.3 and 13.3 mg kg<sup>-1</sup> dry mass, respectively) \[[@
