I'm trying to use a template to this end, but that's not working because the type of the array passed into the allocator is const, which can't be bound to a non-const function. I've thought about adding the function to the vector itself, but that seems like a pain since the size of the array will change so the address of the last element in the vector won't change. Is there a way to const_cast the array to a non-const type, and then bind a function to that type? Here's a simplified example of what I'm trying to do: #include #include #include struct allocator_type { int operator()(int,
