For example, it is known to use steam to sterilize walls of aircraft in flight. However, such equipment is intended for use in a very specific environment. There are many other situations where it would be useful to use relatively clean water as a steam source. The present invention is aimed at providing a mechanism for introducing relatively clean water into contact with a surface to be sterilized. Accordingly, it is an object of the invention to provide a water treatment apparatus in which the water to be sprayed upon the surface is drawn from a relatively clean environment. Another object of the invention is to e79caf774b

I had found a way to get the errors on my cfm pages but not dynamically logged in my coldfusion application. I am looking for an way to write a coldfusion function that would allow me to do something like this: function logError(cfRef, expression, cfType, fileName) { var filePath = "C:\Application\custApp.cfm"; if (fileExists(filePath)) { var content = fileRead(filePath); // NOTE: I am trying to write content to a file // but I want to have this work dynamically for every different combination of variables. } } Is there a way to do this with Coldfusion? A: I can think of one approach, which is to create a shell that will extend your existing functionality a bit: You could have a function that executes for each file request, which would write that to disk, and then it would run the function that actually logs the errors. Once that has written out the error, it would then become part of the coldfusion request. The extension might look something like this: I haven't done it in CF, but if it works,
