: The Anime Five years before the anime adaptation of the popular manga, HAKA came to life. A broadcast of the manga was thought to a great success, despite its 4th serialization. A sequel that features the death of the main character was released in the year of 1992. Although it has a very different look from its sequel, the plot, characterization, and the action itself are identical. Notable moments include the release of the colorful Ninja Master piece, which featured 2 characters more: Devil Kid and Sarge, and the stealthier themes in the series

(genjutsu). Also, the rise of the “new generation” of classic ninjas. Original idea Before he wrote the King of Fighters (the KOF) manga, Tetsuya Mizuguchi was working for Marvelous Entertainment. A main character of the manga was given to him by Mr. Kaneko, with whom they were working at the time. It was the character of Wakaba Shirayuki. Mizuguchi adapted the character into “Ninja Crevasse”. This idea didn’t get much attention and Mizuguchi left to work for Capcom. On the release of the original Jump Street in December, 1992, his idea was translated into a computer game called “Ninja Gaiden”, where, despite a few tweaks of the art, it was developed by Mr. Ikeda. After a while, he created the character of Gagaran, whom he said was the member of a clan that his character was sharing the favorite nights with: the lotus. Ikeda suggested a competition between Hakan and Gagaran, in which the winner would get two months of work with Capcom, and the loser would get fired. The role of these characters was in charge of the director of the game: Kosuke Ohnishi, who took the idea, and asked Ikeda to adorn the characters in a new setting: the country of “Ninja Island”. Created specifically for this work was the character of Hakan-sama, who was supposed to be the leader of the clan. Ikeda wrote the character with the colors reserved for
