Adobe Photoshop For those that are new to Photoshop, there are some basics to be aware of. The interface is quite easy to use, but you have to know where to click. It uses a menu-driven system of keystrokes, which means you have to learn the hotkeys (or key shortcuts) to make it even easier for you to use the tool. Each object that you manipulate in the tool is on a single layer. A layer, when used in conjunction with transparency, is a way to create an overlaid layer. When you select an object, the object and everything else underneath it are all on the same layer. By using several layers, you can create a complex, layered design. If you delete or move a layer, everything is still on that layer. So, it is important to understand that even though you deleted a layer, you can still bring the same content back onto that layer by editing a new layer. If you move a layer to a different level, everything on that layer is moved, too. If you delete a layer, it is permanently deleted. But you can always bring back that content by creating another layer and adding it to the bottom of the layer stack. You can also manually create a layer and paste multiple layers on top of each other. You can also drag the layers down from the top to move them down. Photoshop has a Background Selection tool, which is a very useful tool for placing your photo on a transparent background. It is the most popular layer blending mode, but you can use other blending modes, such as Multiply, Screen, Overlay, Lighten, Darken, and Color Burn. The Shadow and Highlight options have options for getting rid of the highlights or shadows on an image. To do so, simply click them and delete them from the image. These will both replace the highlight or shadow on the layer of the image. You can also easily duplicate any part of the image using the Edit>Duplicate Layer. With the Layer Adjustments options, you can use the Curves, Levels, and other adjustment options on any layer. You can also use the Adjustment tools directly on the image to adjust them. The Levels option can be used to edit the overall brightness and contrast of the image, and to sharpen the image or remove noise. This can be done on the entire image, a single layer, or multiple layers.

Image copyright AFP Image caption In 2014, the controversial $US200m ($S267m) Seoul National University Hospital deal was suspended The BBC has learned that four senior South Korean government officials have been under investigation by prosecutors over allegations that they abused their power to approve a $US200m ($S267m) deal with China's state-owned Bank of China in 2014. The officials, whose names have not been released, were involved in preparing the deal. If they are convicted, they could be sentenced to up to five years in prison. Correspondents say South Korea's financial sector is being probed for corruption. The four officials were reportedly summoned by prosecutors working at Seoul Central District Prosecutor's Office. The officials did not respond to calls or text messages from the BBC. In 2014, the controversial $US200m Seoul National University Hospital deal was suspended amid allegations that some officials pushed to approve the contract in exchange for kickbacks. The hospital deal was cancelled because of concerns about the transparency of the bidding process, and because of concerns about the preferential treatment given to Bank of China and two other state-owned banks. South Korean media previously reported that the bribes paid to secure the deal had been funneled through a firm co-owned by a South Korean member of the ruling party. If convicted, the four officials could face up to 10 years in prison and hefty fines. Correspondents say that, in recent months, the South Korean financial sector has also been under investigation for financial wrongdoing. A birdhouse made from an old-fashioned shoe A designer has fashioned a pair of well-loved shoes with so many extra holes that they resemble a birdhouse. The pair of trainers are sandblasted for extra texture and were then covered in faux stones to resemble a birdhouse. Thomas Reymenies, of Germany, is the man behind the fascinating footwear. He said the shoes were bought for £30 in the sale and seemed to have gone unnoticed until he took a hammer to them to smooth them out. Related Articles The designer's design has won support and admiration online after going viral last week when it was shared by a design-loving audience on Houzz, the property portal and design community. Houzz said the shoe had already been featured once before on the site in 2013 but was snapped up by Mrs Groovek, from Charlotte, North Carolina.
