What's new in Trove - Botanical Blaster Pack:

Dimension Two is a Belgian-Dutch experimental rock group originating from Antwerp. Their music is a hybrid of rock, noise, drone and jazz as well as classical music. The band's sound is a combination of electric guitar, double bass and the human voice. The band's history was documented in documentary films and on the radio programme Ako. History In 1989 the members of Dimension Two were ordinary students at the Industrial Engineering / Architecture Department of the Antwerp University of Applied Sciences. Johan Leysen, Rudy Trouvé and Guy Vanden Borre created music partly with their teacher David Rümlings, het Grote Geers. Jean-Marie De Meyer, a co-founder of the band, was a correspondent of Rudy Trouvé at the time and asked them to do music in his movie studio. He invited them to make a demo tape which has since become the first track of their first EP, "The Solo." The genre of this demo is never mentioned, the band members have stated it to be like things called anything The Solo. This first EP made the band famous in Antwerp and the Antwerp Jazz Centre listened to every track during the recording. During the same year they also performed in a full scale improvisational music concert the 'Nacht van de IJzer' in Smetkamer UB 12. In the same year the song "Nergens" was featured in the cult documentary film De Weerd. In this document, the band was compared to the likes of Årabrot. In 1990 Dimension Two performed with the support of promoter Jonny Boshuizen on a special edition of the Antwerp Jazz Centre. In 1991 the band changed their name from "Nergens" to "Dimension Two" as they composed the music of a grand opera named "Gestorven". They performed the music as an improvisational ensemble in front of an audience in the Huis van de Schilderkunst. The music that was composed at that time is featured on the second eponymous EP that resulted from this event. "Gestorven" was released as a double LP on VPRO. The story of "Gestorven" was described the two years later in the film "De Wereld van de

Chris Fox, CP24.com Less than a month before a citywide vote on whether to privatize aspects of public transit, the city says the initial cost of implementing the proposal will exceed $1 billion. According to a report tabled in council chambers on Friday, the cost estimate is based on recommendations presented by the city's executive committee and will be funded through a capital investment fund. The report says the financing mechanism is a one-time loan that will be paid back through user fees and other revenue sources, not an increase in taxes. The report also notes that user fees on existing TTC fares will be maintained under the proposal, including the enhanced Presto card fare for Presto users. "The financing will be repaid over the next 10 years. Total costs, including one-time cost estimates, are estimated to be $1.1 billion," the report states. The report says that
