Toyota announced yesterday that it will build a total of 3,000 sports cars, that will be sold under the Toyota 86 nameplate in Europe. This is a major step for Toyota as it could herald in the end of the Supra nameplate and its impact on the Japanese carmaker's performance car lineup. Mitsubishi has already discontinued the Outlander PHEV, leaving the two onlys for its performance lineup, the Lancer and the recently launched Evo. So, the last couple of years, it's been Supra vs. Lancer vs. Evo for Toyota, but now it will be Supra vs. Lancer vs. Toyota 86. All three cars will be powered by the same turbocharged 3.0-liter V6 engine, churning out 300hp and 369 lb-ft of torque. The new 86 will also be fully rear-wheel drive, while the previous two cars were front-wheel drive only. This looks to be the first front-wheel drive version of the Supra and it's likely to be cheaper and smaller than its previous iteration. The twin tailpipe exhausts, found on the previous Supra, will likely be replaced by a single one. Expect the 86 to weigh around 800kg (1,760 lbs.) on the curb and reach 0-62mph in 4.6 seconds. The Toyota 86 will hit the market in 2019 with a £48,590 ($55,850) price tag and it will be more than enough to handle the competition from the Lancer and the Evo as well.Q: Accessibility of a inside a tag when the tag is in.tpl file Accessibility of a tag in d0c515b9f4
