Now I'm having the problem that sometimes the ListView crashes (i.e. the ListView crashes the application) because there was too much data. I don't know where to change the ListView and which is the best way to remove elements. I'm using several controls (e.g. a TextBox) that are inside the ListView to show more information than can be shown in a single line (i.e. this is the reason why I use a ListView). If I remove the controls, the application is still crashing. I really need to find a nice solution because all the information are loaded via the ListView and I don't have access to the data source of the ListView. How can I have the best of both worlds: I have a ListView and I can show as many elements as I want, but I'm not forced to load all the elements into memory at once? A: It all depends on how
