You can shape almost anything with it, as long as it's built as a vector shape. Fireworks also enables you to combine a variety of vector shapes into a single object (consult the nearby sidebar, "Simplifying drawing efforts," if you want more information about using shapes).

Trash-to-Fund more than Nutrition Every time I drive by a dumpster, its sight makes me stop, my eyes glued to the trash container that holds the most nutritious daily feedings for my baby. I wait for the recycling bin, because I know it is there. I have been the one to throw away our trash cans and promptly recycle them, even if the blue bin, with recycling, is still available. My gas and electric utilities bills keep me busy with my work and my constant search for new, affordable ways to stretch my dollar. I don't consider saving this energy a sacrifice. Yet, I am grateful for my food stamps and a food pantry that allows me to supplement my family's diet with food donations. I have seen the way a family with more means consumes its trash. When I was living in the county jail, I learned the importance of recycling from a corrections officer who told me that one of the correctional officers was taking the cans from the trash and selling them to a recycling plant. The officer also explained to me why we could buy a can of tuna, condiments and bread from the commissary, rather than being allowed to take any extra food from the trash. "All the food is supposed to go in the trash," the correctional officer told me. "As long as you don't have a lot, you can take what you want." The officer also told me that all the food would be added to the general trash or incinerator. "If you take any extra food," the officer explained, "someone else is getting it, and they will not add it back to the waste." So I have learned to be careful about my trash. I throw it in the bin, make sure it is emptied, and somehow manage to fill the trash can again. Last week, I had a new baby. Now that I had a baby, I could not add food to the waste. So I turned to the county's food pantry for support. I never dreamed of hunger again. In time, I felt guilty that I was saving food that could be shared with my baby. I did not think that we can donate our trash. I should have. In the day's long working hours, my husband and I found it difficult to give our

Sodas used in food containers are often discarded when their content becomes depleted or unfavorably flavored. Generally, the soda container is returned to the store where it is placed in a trash receptacle, but this process is both slow and unsanitary. The soda container is usually deposited into the trash receptacle having a light coat of deposit on its bottom. The user has to scrape the bottom of the soda container and the deposit before the can can be transported to another container for recycling. The time required for such work and the chance of a sanitation problem increase the likelihood of untimely leakage. This problem is compounded in the case of carbonated beverages which expand upon opening. As a result of the foregoing problems, considerable attention has been directed to recycling of soda cans. Coke and orange juice containers are used to facilitate such recycling, but like the soda cans, such containers are oftentimes placed in a trash receptacle, causing their contents to be abandoned and discarded. One prior art container disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,100,722 to Burkholder et al. discloses a container for receiving and retaining recyclable food residue. The container is formed in two halves. The bottom half is provided with a resilient flange which holds the container in place during transportation, and the top half is made from an elastic material which is sufficiently elastic to permit the top half to compress slightly when downward force is applied. The container further includes a channel extending around the upper edge of the container. A hole is provided in the top half of the container. The lower end of the container is fixed to a support structure such as a door, while the hole is provided with a lid which is held in place by a band-like arrangement. U.S. Pat. No. 4,326,449 to McKown et al. discloses a container for retaining food residue and the like. The container is formed of two halves which are fixed together by interlocking sections. The top half is initially provided with a plurality of holes, through which the food residue can be poured. The bottom half is made of a resilient material which allows the container to be deformed easily to accommodate the retention of food residue and the like. U.S. Pat. No. 4,220,338 to Wiesen et al. discloses a collection bag for food and beverage containers. The bag has an attachment portion for maintaining the bag in a predetermined position on a support
