disk C:\\ RemoveWAT 2.2.9.rar..Danish authorities have said they are confident that what they believe to be the most complete MH17 flight data record from the doomed Malaysia Airlines jet will be released, after several months of fighting a legal battle with a Boeing co-owner. In an emailed statement, the Danish National Police said it expected “to release the full data record for the Malaysian Airlines flight MH17 in early October”. It has been thought that this record will not include information from a flight-data-monitoring system – such as an in-flight entertainment system – installed in the cockpit of the MH17. The statement was sent in response to questions from VICE News. According to the statement, Danish authorities will work with Boeing and technical experts to ensure “that any information that has been withheld is made accessible to the public as soon as possible”. The data record is held by the MH17 Human Remains Identification Team, which was tasked with identifying the remains of those killed in the crash. If the information is not made public, this could prevent the families of those killed from being identified. The data record also forms part of the legal case against Boeing and the other co-owner of the plane, Malaysia Airlines, in the Dutch court system. Boeing previously tried to prevent releasing the data record on the grounds that it was proprietary, but the court disagreed. So far, the court has heard oral evidence given by a Boeing employee, and the report will be available in October. A Boeing spokesperson told the Associated Press that the company will now work with the investigators to release the data record once the proceedings end. The MH17 Boeing 777 smashed into a large field outside the eastern Ukrainian city of Torez
