Bomber Blok (Full title: Bomber Blok àNiroDin, aNger of aND within) was a rock band from New York City. It was active from 1995 through 2000, and consists of brothers James Leeb (drums/vocals, born September 15, 1965) and Steven Leeb (lead guitar, vocals, born February 13, 1965), along with vocalist (and two-time James Beard Award-nominee) David "Gibby" Gibson, from 1997 through 2000. (Bomber Blok was also Brian 'Blaz' Uzelac's third band; he was the lead guitarist and a backing vocalist for their second album, Proportioning, but had left the band before their first, Popsicle). The band was a noted cult favorite in the Deep South of the 1990s, particularly in New Orleans, among young people of both sexes. The band is best known for songs such as "You Belong With Me", "Bobo Rising", "Peaceful Brown People Dancing", "I Need You Now", "Witch Make-Up", and "Willing Captive". Later in its career, Bomber Blok became "the boys who recorded the Black Crowes album, the fellow who won five Grammy Awards and then bolted, the elder statesman of the alternative rock, the band that returned home to the Texaco Stage to play its early hits in a show that was watched by New York's rock elite" (NYDN). The band disintegrated after its founder left, citing a generally hostile environment in New York. History Bomber Blok was formed in Morristown, New Jersey, in the late 1980s by two brothers, James and Steven Leeb. The Leeb brothers would later have two other bands called Bomber Blok: a band with

Eric "Sloppy" Miller, from their hometown of Perryville, Ohio, which formed in 1992 and was named Bombed Blocked, and a "west coast" version of the band, which became known as Gotham Bomber Blok after their move to Los Angeles in 1994. That band, which featured guitarist David "Gibby" Gibson, bassist Kyle Massey, and drummer Blake Pischke, (who had played in the L.A. Sludge Rats since early 1993) would later come back as a different version of the same band with several different lineups after the Leeb brothers split and
