On January 16, 2013, the Texas Commission on Environmental Quality (TCEQ) announced the results of its second phase Environmental Impact Report (EIR) on the Fossil Ash Surface Mining Waste (FASM) Category Rule. The rule establishing an amendment to the Texas Surface Coal Mining, Regulation, and Enforcement Act (TCEQ) Regulations would establish FASM as a Type II hazardous waste. TCEQ will not authorize the discharge of the waste to a landfill or other site for disposal. Substantial amendments to the Underground Injection Control (UIC) Rule require the implementation of a six-step monitoring plan for each well or well group within the FASM area. Operators have until March 31, 2014, to complete the sixth step and again have until March 31, 2015, to complete the fifth step.

The application is fairly limited to creating buckets and folders within those buckets. I would like to be able to upload files to a specified bucket/folder. I have read all about google-cloud-storage on their site and I can get that running. I do not see the interfaces or libraries they have available for Java or Android. I see their java client, but it looks like that just runs a console. Any recommendations on how I can use their Java client? A: We do not currently provide Java libraries that can directly interact with the storage APIs. We have a Java Cloud Storage SDK that can be used to interact with storage APIs. If you're using something like Java 7 or 8 and want to minimize your server requirements, Cloud Storage Java SDK may be what you're looking for. A: As a complement to the blog post by Michael Hausenblas explaining that it is not possible to access Google Cloud Storage through Java, I'd like to mention an additional limitation: Google Cloud Storage is not directly exposed through any of the Java libraries like JDBC or Apache Commons. It is accessible through the gsclient tool, which allows to consume the client library. Currently this is limited to working only with buckets, listing the contents of a bucket, but no file operations. It has been discussed at: is not enough to support a time dependent change in the discriminant function. It has been argued that a time dependent change in a diagnostic test or in the definition of a disease may occur due to changes in the incidence, diagnosis, or case-fatality [@pone.0078509-Jackson1]. Indeed, the observed oscillation in data patterns most likely results from changing patterns of diagnosis, since there is no evidence that the incidence of first time treated meningococcal disease has changed in recent years. It is clear that there are considerable limitations to this evaluation. However, there are no other data sources for investigating trends in the incidence of
