You can also use Photoshop as a digital photo editor; the following sections give you an overview of the features that help to make that happen. # ADDING SPECIAL EFFECTS, TEXT, AND SHAPES TO YOUR IMAGE A special effect may be an image enhancement technique, such as simulated haze, negative contrast, or sharpening, or it may be a painting effect that adds depth and dimension to your image. Photoshop comes with many special effects that enable you to make major enhancements to your photos. A couple of special effects are easy to apply and others require more experience using Photoshop to understand how to use them. You can use special effects to make an image appear lighter, darker, or different in tone. Photoshop offers a variety of other ways to make a picture appear artistically by adding or removing color, textures, and special effects. # DEFINING SPECIAL EFFECTS To access special effects, you need to select them in your toolbox. To see a specific special effect, click the Effects button in the lower-right corner of the Photoshop window (see Figure 3-2). The Effects dialog box opens with a full list of the special effects in Photoshop. FIGURE 3-2: Choose special effects from the Effects button at the bottom right of the Photoshop window. You can access a larger library of special effects in Photoshop by using the File⇒Open dialog box. This dialog box lists special effects, such as blur, focus, desaturation, colorize, and more. ## Applying Blur You can use the Blur option in the Effects menu to alter the look of an image — one way to make it appear more realistic

Q: Delphi to Java code mapping Delphi to Java code mapping is a great help for a Delphi developer. I've seen many tools such as Delphi to Java Converter and DAJDroid. Are there any tool that let you make both Delphi to Java and Java to Delphi mapping? (so let's say you have a Delphi application and you have to access some parts of it from a Java application). A: You can try an online Delphi to Java IDE that provide simple online Delphi to Java code mapping. Note: this service work on Windows, but should work on Delphi XE. Here is the tool I've used for this purpose. . Kabul: Afghanistan's deputy attorney general said Monday that President Hamid Karzai cannot be prosecuted in the United States because of the country's rule of law. The comment could add a layer of complication to a stalemate between Karzai and lawmakers on appointing a new attorney general for the war-torn country. Hajji Hashem Khorasani said "Afghanistan is a democratic country, and the president has immunity," after answering questions from a panel of lawmakers during a session of the lower house of parliament. Khorasani, an outspoken parliamentarian, is one of the president's top deputies. The parliament panel was trying to figure out the legal provisions in Afghanistan to rule on whether Karzai can be prosecuted in the U.S. on war crimes charges, but the maneuver was blocked by one of his legislative allies. If the solution to one data breach, or a series of data breaches, is more monitoring of data privacy, it is time for Canada to stop pointing the finger at the United States for the lack of US data breaches and instead start paying attention to the many data breaches that occur in Canada. From the now hundreds of reported data breaches, only the most egregious ones come to our attention. Under the spotlight: Canada and the United States Every time there is a data breach, some journalist points their finger at Canada and the US, and not the perpetrators of the breach. We now know that criminals have breached the personal information of millions of Canadian citizens since at least 2001. Then, last year, it was revealed that Canadians were among the hundreds of millions of records leaked to the public from a database at an HP subsidiary
