"We are currently offering the opportunity to provide citizenship to the baby of a U.S. citizen parent." Saudi Arabia's ambassador to the United States, Adel Al-Jubeir, reportedly told a Senate committee of lawmakers in New York. "To get the best results, we offer citizenship to the baby of a U.S. citizen parent under a law, not just to a citizen parent, but also to the baby," he said. "If this creates a hurdle in adopting a child, we would be prepared to [maintain] the status of the child." Al-Jubeir's offer, which contrasts starkly with his country's similar offer to help the Trump administration accelerate the citizenship process for children of illegal aliens, and several other countries, including Iran, comes amid a bitter dispute between the House of Representatives and the Trump administration over the fate of a law known as the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program. The proposal, which has been floated in the past but never actually enacted, would likely trigger a legal challenge to the constitutionality of the so-called birthright citizenship clause of the 14th Amendment. In 1790, the Constitution provides that "all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside." The president, however, has discretion over the citizenship status of DACA recipients, and earlier this month, he announced that he would phase out the program, shifting the responsibility to Congress to fix the d0c515b9f4

I've came up with something, but there's one little "inconvenience": print(filter_key(d, '2', 'key1')) {'key2': False} >>> print(filter_key(d, '3', 'key1')) {'key2': False} >>> print(filter_key(d, '3', 'key2')) {} I do not want that at all. I need the function to filter as if key2 were the only one available. If key1 or key2 were available, filter the keys ONLY by the one that exists. I'm aware
