Please give some idea what is the period of the sine waves. The sine wave looks like a node of a function. Is it given by a length? A: If I'm not mistaken, the frequency of the signal is the same everywhere. You have a first sinusoidal wave that is sampled at 60 Hz. If you then apply a low pass filter with a cut-off frequency of 3 Hz, the resulting signal looks like the second, third and fourth image. If you're interested, I've attached a screen capture showing the sampling pattern. Q: In "That 70s Show" and "Family Guy," women are seen in advertising or in other ways as being largely insignificant, as a side effect of the era. How do these works compare with depictions of this in other periods in film and literature? In "That 70s Show" and "Family Guy," women are seen in advertising or in other ways as being largely insignificant, as a side effect of the era in which the works take place. Yet, I would guess that some of the same sentiments of this type of portrayals exist in other eras, and that these sentiments have been deeply rooted in our cultural consciousness. How, then, do these portrayals differ, if at all, in other eras? I am looking for an answer to this broad question, which covers both pre-1970s and post-1970s eras, whether or not they are set specifically within the era during which the works have been set. A: Women at the time were only in charge of a few things. Advertising is not one of them. Advertising was very male dominated. You can actually go and look for examples of how women were in advertising. It is the women who were in charge of sewing, knitting and cooking. And they were usually shown to be very modest, charming, honest and skillful. These women were the mothers of the soldiers who were fighting for the country. In fact, the modern industry was based on women, not on men. Without women there is no machine.
