In case you missed it, subscription-based web browser IE4Windows9x is up for grabs, as of 1:19 AM PT on Monday, October 20, 2009. That is 98 days from publication of our review at The Consumerist. For those of you wondering, the original IE4 for Windows or IE5 for Windows 98 are no longer offered on the Big Download site, as use of Windows XP is increasing, as reported at Deals and Reviews; but, it's still possible on the Internet Explorer for Windows Blog Site under the Web Browser Games category. The top commenter at Eclairon's review says that you can get the game for free by calling Microsoft direct, but that isn't what we read at The Consumerist. If you want the benefit of this upgrade to IE4, best to at least wait until it's available, so you don't have to make a mass purchase, as some have already indicated. Here are the prices as listed on the Big Download Web Site for IE4 and IE4 for Windows 98: If not sure what this is, do some research by typing these keywords in the box at the top: Updated information at The Consumerist says that you have until midnight on Tuesday, October 21, to get this upgrade for free. Try the secret contact method at 711-573-2218 to get them to call you. Since it's Monday and some of you are visiting, go grab it and enjoy. Here's a bit more on the history of what you'll get upon purchase of the game: Windows 3.1-based Internet Explorer (IE)4 removed Java technology from the browser, preventing Java applets from running on Internet Explorer. Microsoft, in contrast, continues to make developers a very generous offer to include Java technology in the Windows operating system. The Windows RTM version of the Windows 7 operating system included a special "fallback" setting on the "Emulate software mode" setting. This setting enabled installation of IE6 (Windows 98) to bypass the security restrictions in place on 64-bit versions of IE6. Windows 9x and 95 users would thus be able to download the

Q: Android Studio app is crashing when I sync I have just updated to Android Studio and moved all my projects to this. I can't seem to get rid of this error. I found another user on the Android.StackOverflow said it was this error, and when I change my API level from API 19 to API 21 it gets rid of the error. Does anyone else have this error. This is the only issue I have encountered. A: This often happens when using Android Studio. Try this: File -> Invalidate caches/restart. Q: Embed third party libraries with AngularJS If I am developing a large AngularJS web app, will it be recommended to develop all the code from scratch, or should I use some open-source 3rd party library, like Bootstrap or AngularUI. A: The beauty of using AngularJS is that it is independent of the rest of the application. So in theory, even if you aren't using it, it's still nice to be able to read its code and then use parts of it in your app. If you are writing the rest of the code from scratch, then you are learning about AngularJS, but you aren't yet using it. Using third-party libraries can be good for the same reason. As you said, they usually provide a library of the stuff that's important and you can just use it in your application. It also means you can leverage work already done to make your application better. You can even merge their work with your own to improve it. I've been thinking about this lately for AngularJS since I'm planning to do the same thing for my next app. What I'm really deciding on is which libraries to use. I'm leaning towards not using one, but I'm not sure. I've got a few in mind to try out. I'm also wary of creating my own AngularJS library for fear that it'll be used in other applications and I'll have to maintain it. Q: Python 3 vs. Python 2: Say Goodbye to Bad Foreign Objects I'm running into an issue where Python 3 raises a TypeError when trying to say goodbye to a bad foreign object. This code works perfectly in Python 3: `try: foo = [1,2] except TypeError:`
