As I mentioned in the above linked review, I really wanted to like Planet Alpha as it is a great looking game, excellently presented and with a decent atmosphere in the graphics and environments. Then it died...I don't know what went wrong but this is one of the most frustrating games I've ever played. The controls are wonky. The game is d41b202975

What's new:

Planeta Alpha: Original Soundtrack is a 2003 album of orchestra arrangements by Harold Budd, who died in 2009, of his own compositions inspired by Italian maestri: Philip Glass, Michael Nyman, Maurizio Cheli, Luigi Dallapiccola, Klaus Schulze and Dieter Moebius, among others. I suppose Hype Williams' release of his final work at Source D'or last year ("Detour" from 2010) hinted at Budd's planned second album. This outing, produced by Russ Brandom, is much bigger. It has been organized in three sections: Idylls, Poems and Fantasy. The first section is the easiest to appreciate. It is devoted to orchestral renderings of a series of seven of Harold Budd's short pieces - now ageless - that had already been released on the various 4AD albums (see above). The sounds of these pieces are rich and haunting, so it is all the more significant to hear them played by a great orchestra at their fullest. This is the best studio recording Harold ever had in his life. Mikes and Bob's musical atmospheres, fine balances, and ultraconscientious recording detail, lead the listener into a genuinely hallucinatory state. As for the poet-composer Budd, and the Polish arranger Moebius, the album is pure delight. They understood what the band did so well. Their very different approach to the marriage of jazz and classical arrangements is always rich, powerful and nuanced. It's like reading the avant-garde dictionaries of the three 20th century composers who happen to be my inspiration:

Dallapiccola, Schulze, and Philip Glass. Or like reading the dictionary of Keats (who gave my cousin the idea of Zen Buddhism). Musically, [these sounds] are as eccentric as Philip Glass's works. The primeval energy of Eastern culture surfaces here. There is a metaphor of Mount Fuji and the Nido of a pair of eagles - as if recorded at different times, simultaneously, at the moment when the sound in the atmosphere changes its nature. The imagination of these three composers is strong, fruitful, and rich with obscure myths and fables. There are games of riddles, of binaries, of compositional and re-compositional cycles. The classical technologies with which they work are not the same. It's always adapted.
