Download on Google Play Vietnam US 2017 92 mins C Movie Description The Vietnam War was America's longest and bloodiest war. A war that claimed the lives of millions. Throughout the United States there were marches and protests, reflecting the anger at the American involvement. The United States Civil Rights movement was just beginning and was growing. Inspired by the political freedoms of Martin Luther King Jr. and by the belief that African Americans were not being protected by the established government, a wave of civil disobedience began. These protests included the Million Man March and The Poor People's Campaign. This documentary follows the growing civil disobedience and explores how it can be channeled into protest and the subsequent arrest of hundreds of activists. About the movie Originally a large idea to cover all forms of protest and civil disobedience during the Vietnam War, the documentary was then guided down the path of trial and error to cover every protest that happened, every single arrest that happened. Eventually the documentary became a personal journey and became less about covering the wars, and became a story about who these activists were and what became of them. Download on Google Play About the documentary The Trip Across the River Focusing on a specific wave of civil disobedience that took place across the United States in the years 1967 and 1968, the films highlight the issues surrounding the protests. Getting Arrested. This section of the film covers the arrest of hundreds of protesters, and the trials that followed. This was the largest wave of arrests on American soil during the Vietnam War and the arrests occurred between the years 1967 and 1968. In the months leading up to the April 1968 marches, there were ongoing protests and marches across the country, including the week of the protests across the nation. The Fight For Freedom The film then focuses more on the specific case of the Civil Disobedience Movement and the people involved. Towards the end of the film, the film moves back to the start of the protest
