We have synthesized shape-controlled gold nanostructures by the oxidation of a Au(3+) complex in aqueous media. After drying of the solution, two steps of pyrolysis were performed. In the first step, the deposition of gold proceeded on the alumina template to form solid polycrystalline gold nanowires and nanopillars. In the second step, the size and shape of the nanostructures were gradually changed and completed by pyrolysis of the alumina template. Morphological changes of the gold nanostructures, such as the elongation of wires, the formation of nanopillars, and the decrease in size, can be regulated by the number of steps. The optimized size is obtained at the eighth step, corresponding to a temperature of 560 degrees C. The as-synthesized gold nanowires as well as nanopillars are proposed to be single-crystal gold nanostructures.Utah Jazz vs. Golden State Warriors: San Antonio Spurs Preview Let's assume this is as good as it gets for the Utah Jazz and their second unit. That's a bit of a bold statement, but it's also one that I think explains the San Antonio Spurs' motivation to ease the locker room pressure of a potential Finals matchup with the Golden State Warriors, even as a 54-win team. Having said that, there are other factors at play. The Spurs' confidence has been cranked up considerably from the end of the regular season, when there was no pressure on them for at least cracking the Western Conference Finals. San Antonio's desire to look dominant in the postseason has kept them razor sharp. And when you count the value of a big home win over the lowly Jazz to help put San Antonio in position for an NBA title
