But we’re not talking about them (yet). They aren’t really even part of the one percent anymore. Instead, we mean hedge fund managers, private equity CEOs, oil company CEOs, and a few other outsiders who rake in the lucre. Yet they are an important part of what we’re referring to when we say “the one percent,” namely that a tiny elite at the very top of society has accumulated a massive amount of wealth — and not only is it concentrated at the very top, but it’s concentrated in the hands of a few players. There are few (none?) debates in Washington these days that aren’t
