Spotmau Powersuite Golden 2013 Crack.Q: Disable timers in background with Xamarin.iOS I'm building an app that needs to run in background. This app runs timers and does some other stuff. I can use this code in the viewDidLoad: UIApplication.SharedApplication.IdleTimerDisabled = true; Or I can send the use a background location request, but it's very costly (more than 10 seconds). Is there a way to stop all timers from running and keep the app running until it is killed by user? Note: I know I can add the iOS application capability capabilities, but it was very costly. A: There are no methods to disable all timers and keep your app running in background, you can only disable each timer by using: UIApplication.SharedApplication.IdleTimerDisabled = true; So, if you want to keep your app running and disable all timers, you can use the following approach: When you create the timer, you can set a DateTime with the date when your app will be inactive. When the event happens you can send an event to your app, that will tell you that you need to set the timer date to today. Then you can update the date to the current date, update the timer property and do some stuff. When your app enters in background, just do the same, check the current date, update the date of the app and make the rest of the work. I'm doing the same for an app called TaporiTalker. You can check some details about the app here. Hope it help! YouTube is the world’s largest
