It has known security flaws and may not work correctly. We recommend you upgrade your browser. Read more on how to update. We use secure socket layer (SSL) to help protect all content you submit during any online transactions. We use this technology to send you your login, so that the people behind the sites you are accessing cannot intercept your data. This is the same SSL technology that protects online banking sites. If you are a credit card user, you probably remember the days when online credit card transactions were sent over the unencrypted (http) connection. Such credit card transactions were completely insecure and anyone intercepting your data could steal from your account. As a result, credit card companies began encrypting online transactions to help protect your data. To send your credit card information over a secure connection, you can enter your card details into the "Buy Now" boxes on our website, shopping carts or any places that will send you credit card details. Your card details are sent to us by encrypted connection (https), which means that your data is now protected from interception by unauthorised third parties. Please note that if you are still receiving unencrypted (http) credit card transactions, it's because you have not activated the SSL
