Could be. It's called tinnitus - perhaps if the tinnitus was a little louder, you'd notice it. Some people have this symtom (upside down people sometimes have this) and they don't seem to need any additional help it's there all the time - it's as constant as the weather. I don't know if there's a treatment, or if it is an issue of ageing ears. I am still a young man, but I suspect that I will be a "worn out" man before I know it - so perhaps I should try to ignore it for now at least. What is the highestquality audio on this unit that you can get? Ideally, higher-quality audio means you have more 'channels' (plural of channel) and therefore can utilize more signal space. The Dolby Digital and DTS that are part of the Dolby Digital Decoders are probably the most accurate we could do. However, there are several speakers with a subwoofer, some with a tweeter and some with a full range speaker that are similarly capable of providing quality audio. However, there are several that are smaller than others (such as our "home theater" version) and that may be more difficult to set up. Full range speakers such as Dolby Digital or DTS may be suitable for speakers used in'real' stereos, but many of our speakers are intended for use where big and booming isn't wanted. This being the case, the speakers are not usually arranged as if they are in a larger complete stereo. Perhaps if we had an "H" shaped set, that could send Dolby Digital to the bottom left, DTS to the bottom right, and the speakers to the top left and top right, it would make it easier to suggest and to listen 6d1f23a050
