become the first city in the world to make pot legal for recreational use when Massachusetts lawmakers pass a legalization bill in the upcoming session of the Legislature. While the state's top legislative

leaders say they support decriminalizing marijuana and plan to introduce a bill this year, Gov. Charlie Baker has said he will not take action on the subject before the end of the year. That could change in the next week. State Sens. Jeanette M. Kroll, a Milton

---

Democrat, and Joseph F. Kennedy III, a Boston Democrat, introduced the bill last week. House Speaker Robert A. DeLeo, a Winthrop Democrat, said it is “fair to say” the bill will make it to the floor in the upcoming legislative session. “It is very simple. It is a tax and regulate,” DeLeo said. “You have to have a 21 year-old. You have to have the equivalent of a National Liquor Store in every corner of the state, and you have to have a certain amount of production in Massachusetts.” Kennedy said the bill would set up a three-tier system for the state. A small number of marijuana dispensaries, similar to alcohol outlets, would be regulated by the state. The third tier would involve retail shops, similar to liquor stores, which would be licensed and regulated by local municipalities. But they would not be allowed to sell marijuana — the bill would make it a misdemeanor for anyone to sell it to a person under 21 years old or to give it away or sell it to someone who is under 21.

“The reason for the

difference in the two is that somebody who sells a little bit to somebody who is 21 will always face the possibility of felony prosecution,” Kennedy said. “The responsibility of the state does not extend to the places where a 21-year-old can buy a joint.” Boston is an outspoken opponent of the bill. In a letter to state Senate President Harriette Chandler, the chairwoman of the Joint Committee on Public Health and the chairwoman of the Committee on Alcohol and Other Drugs, the Marijuana
