however, many of the google fonts' typefaces are not suitable for editorial use. this is mainly due to the lack of swash characters, such as f, f and f, and the limited numbers of basic ligature and diacritical characters. you can see them in the bottom right of the illustration below. some of the additional characters are available in the google font "droid sans" and android studio users should check out the android support library site for the official list of supported fonts. the following table, taken from google fonts, shows the number of ligature and diacritical characters within each font. and because of how google's font list is presented, it is hard to make an accurate comparison across the group. you can see the baseline position, the number of characters and punctuation marks in the tables above, as well as see what special characters the fonts support using the window below. if you want to see a list of fonts designed exclusively for screen use, the google fonts' screen fonts page is a good resource. as for google font's font list, because each google webfont can be selected differently (using the view button in the top-right corner), you can click on each one to see the fonts' font families and the information from the table above. here. the library has 3,775,000 total fonts which includes both free and premium fonts. so it is easy to grab a typeface you like. all google fonts are accessible via @font-face. don't forget to always include it in your documents. 5ec8ef588b
