allows for the passing of data between a web client and server without needing a huge amount of code in each process. the web component of web service communication is the uniform resource locator, or url. urls have two parts, protocol and host. the host identifies the server and port used by the server for the service. port numbers can range from 0 to 65535. here are a few examples of valid urls:

`http://www.server.com:8080/service`

`https://www.com:443/service` `http://www.com:80/service`

`https://www.com/service` `https://www.com/service`

`http://www.com:80` `https://www.com:443`

`https://www.com:443` `http://www.com` `https://www.com`

`http://www.com` if the host does not contain `https://`, the browser will usually add this automatically. the location of the service is often determined by the server's location, which can include the company's name, product name, or the product's domain name. the most common url structure can be created with a / at the end of the location, but / is often used in the same way as ./, a relative reference that tells the browser to look in the current directory for the requested resource. urls without the / at the end may also be used. if you are configuring a web service hosted on the internet to be accessible only by other computers on your network, then port number 80 is commonly used. port 80 is commonly referred to as the "standard" port, and has special significance in the web. from the internet's perspective, port 80 is used for "http traffic" while all other ports are only used for "network traffic". 5ec8ef588b
