play electric guitar in our church band, and Ive found that Capo 3 is a great learning/practice tool. I get a chord chart from our director, so I dont pay much attention to the chords that Capo 3 generates, but theyre usually the same, some times with some extra ones thrown in (which is a result of how Capo 3 recognizes chords). I can change the key, if necessary, to the key that were playing the song in, loop sections and slow them down to learn certain parts. Is it perfect Probably not, but it does all that I need, and more. I would recommend Capo 3 to any aspiring musicianlike I said earlier, its a great practice tool. Rob I play electric guitar in our church band, and Ive found that Capo 3 is a great learning/practice tool. If you know that you need to know how the chords are generated, Capo 3 will do them for you. These its for the purpose of learning different parts. I've been using this app for the last couple of years and it's helped me tremendously as I'm learning the guitar. On a more personal note I also do a lot of singing (a capella) and it's a great way to practice sections of songs. I try to be quite faithful to the recorded track but also easy to edit. The beat detection within capo 3 works well, in an ideal world I'd be able to improve the on key detection as there are certain songs that I just can't get to loop properly in the app. Also my pocket has a tendency to squish it and cause the pitch to go down by a few hundred cents, this seems to affect vocals and chord progressions the most (which are the hardest to capture in capo). The interface is however very simple to use and the settings are easy to access. Overall I'm very happy with the app and would recommend it to any guitarist/singer who likes to practice in detail.Rob 5ec8ef588b
