Q: Using the right-most, write-to-terminal, stand-alone graphic display adapter (GPU) in Google Colab I have been able to use GPU for some time now on Ubuntu and Raspbian. Now I need to use GPU in Google Colab notebook, which uses Google Chrome. I have installed the official GPU drivers from Google for Google Colab, but unfortunately this does not work. There is a relevant issue report in the chromium project, but I have no idea how to apply the suggested solution (the right-most, write-to-terminal, stand-alone graphic display adapter) in my case, where I need to run a stand-alone WebAssembly code in Google Colab notebook. Is there any other way to run a WebAssembly code on Google Colab?

A: I also would like to use GPU in Google Colab notebook. I use Chrome as a Jupyter notebook client. And I use the right-most, write-to-terminal, stand-alone graphic display adapter and it works well for me. This is the case : This is the link for the original answer : A: Just found this question while researching a way to add GPU support
