This study investigates whether or not a user-friendly page-to-page navigation system enhances the learning outcomes for undergraduate students. The experiment was carried out with two groups of students, one using a traditional navigation system (T-Nav), and the other using the new page-to-page navigation system (N-Nav). The students' learning outcomes were compared using a control-experiment. The results indicate that the users of the N-Nav system were able to produce more and longer-term ideas than the users of the T-Nav system. This study further suggests that the learning outcomes can be enhanced using a new user-friendly page-to-page navigation system. The results imply that
