Yes, the internet and the rise of e-commerce are revolutionizing the world of commerce, but so is technology. And that's why the new way of life is about logistics – we're changing the way we think about distribution and movement, so the economy can perform better. And what that looks like isn't just a drop in a box for our clothes. Most technology is about reducing the effort, cost and risk associated with any operation. That's why you don't find people complaining about the amount of money they pay for their groceries in a basket at the supermarket, or that the internet is taking over their lives. They understand that we get what we pay for, and that they're doing it because they need to buy food. The same principle applies to logistics. If you can reduce the cost, effort and risk of moving something around the world, then that has a major impact on the price of that item. The same goes for services too. If you make it easier to get from point A to point B, then you can charge a premium for it. There are huge savings to be made on logistics. When it comes to services, how you operate your logistics is just as important as how you operate your business. The future of logistics is about the new way of life Today, a huge amount of inventory sits on the shelves of physical retailers, waiting to be sold. This is why they need to keep that inventory for as long as possible. They're constantly under pressure to restock, but because they have so much inventory, it's not practical to try and keep it all. This is where things get interesting. Think about how you pay for almost anything online. On Amazon or eBay, you're charged at the same price for shipping as the actual product. But with the rise of online shopping, an item can go from one location in the world to another without spending any money on the journey. If you're paying the same price for shipping as you are the product, you're losing money. So, who's ultimately responsible for the cost? The answer is the retailer. They're the ones selling the product, but they're not the ones who incur the shipping costs. This can be a huge problem for the retailer. If they spend all their

To run the full game you must have one of the following: Windows 7 64bit/ 32bit (Windows 10 is not officially supported) Windows 8/8.1 64bit (Windows 10 is not officially supported) Mac OS 10.6 or later Intel processor with SSE3 (or equivalent) instruction set Our full game is playable with very little modifications (you can find it here), but we have only created a stand-alone version to let you play the parts that we didn't have time to implement.
